Reign of care and compassion

Pahang Ruler Al-Sultan Abdullah Ri'ayatuddin Al-Mustafa Billah Shah celebrates his official birthday today with wishes of health and blessings from the people.

Ruling with wisdom and honour

THE Sultan of Pahang, Al-Sultan Abdullah Ri'ayatuddin Al-Mustafa Billah Shah, has earned a reputation as a Ruler who values direct engagement with the rakyat.

Whether visiting flood victims, attending community events or interacting with ordinary citizens during official programmes, His Royal Highness has consistently projected an image of accessibility, humility and compassion.

Behind this approachable demeanour, however, lies decades of service, leadership and dedication to both Pahang and the nation.

Born on July 30, 1959, at Istana Mangga Tunggal in Pekan, Al-Sultan Abdullah is the fourth child and eldest son of Almarhum Sultan Ahmad Shah and Almarhumah Tengku Ampuan Afzan.

His Royal Highness received his early education at Sekolah Kebangsaan Ahmad in Pekan and St Thomas School in Kuantan before continuing his studies at Aldenham School, Davies College and the Royal Military Academy Sandhurst in the United Kingdom.

In 1981, the Sultan pursued studies in International Relations and Diplomacy at Worcester and Queen Elizabeth College.

Al-Sultan Abdullah was named Tengku Mahkota Pahang on July 1, 1975, and formally installed as heir apparent on Oct 23, 1977, at Istana Abu Bakar in Pekan.

The Ruler married Tengku Ampuan Pahang Tunku Azizah Aminah Maimunah Iskandariah in 1986, and the royal couple has nine children.

A defining chapter in his public service came in January 2019, when the Conference of Rulers elected him as Malaysia's 16th Yang di-Pertuan Agong following the resignation of Sultan Muhammad V of Kelantan.

> Behind this approachable demeanour, however, lies decades of service, leadership and dedication to both Pahang and the nation.

Under the constitutional rotation system among the Malay Rulers, the Sultan of Pahang was next in line to assume the throne. However, Sultan Ahmad Shah's ill health necessitated an amendment to the state constitution to enable the Pahang royal council to formalise his abdication.

Al-Sultan Abdullah was subsequently proclaimed the sixth Sultan of Pahang of the modern era on Jan 15, 2019, paving the way for his installation as Malaysia's Head of State.

five-year reign as Yang di-Pertuan Agong in January 2024, Al-Sultan Abdullah returned to Pahang to an outpouring of affection from the people. Thousands lined the streets to welcome the royal couple home, underscoring the strong bond forged during his years on the national throne.

Throughout his reign, Al-Sultan Abdullah has frequently emphasised the importance of sincerity, accountability and service in leadership.

Rather than remaining confined to ceremonial duties, His Royal Highness has often chosen to engage directly with communities, listen to their concerns and encourage prompt action on issues affecting the people.

His public addresses have consistently stressed that leadership is measured not merely by words, but by the ability to fulfil promises and uphold the trust placed by the rakyat.

During a recent royal engagement in Lipis, Al-Sultan Abdullah reminded leaders that assistance to the people should be provided continuously and sincerely, regardless of political circumstances.

"The people do not crave leaders who are only good in oratory skills but expect leaders who hold to their words, who treat their promises as commitments and keep trust as a responsibility that is carried out until it is completed," His Royal Highness said.

The Ruler also cautioned against treating public welfare as a seasonal concern.

"Helping the people should not be like the seasonal rain; heavy during elections, then disappearing when the season passes. Instead, caring for the welfare of the people should flow like a river that never ceases to the estuary," His Royal Highness said.

At the same event, Al-Sultan Abdullah expressed appreciation to the Pahang government for its continued efforts to implement welfare initiatives and safeguard the well-being of the people.

As Pahang celebrates another royal birthday, Al-Sultan Abdullah's legacy continues to be shaped not only by the positions the Ruler has held, from Sultan of Pahang to Yang di-Pertuan Agong, but by the values His Royal Highness has consistently championed throughout his years of service.

For many Pahang residents, his enduring strength as a Ruler lies in his ability to remain grounded, approachable and closely connected to his subjects.

Championing youth and progress

TO many Malaysians, the Sultan of Pahang is best known through official ceremonies, state functions and his constitutional responsibilities.

Yet beyond the formality of palace events lies a Ruler whose interests and engagements extend well beyond the throne, reflecting a lifelong commitment to community service, youth development and the well-being of the people.

Throughout the years, Al-Sultan Abdullah Ri'ayatuddin Al-Mustafa Billah Shah has maintained an active interest in activities that encourage discipline, unity and healthy living.

In His Royal Highness' younger years, Al-Sultan Abdullah played various sports such as football and polo, winning a gold medal in the latter sport during the 12th SEA games in Singapore in 1983.

His leadership in sports administration is equally well established, having served in several key positions, including president of the Football Association of Malaysia (FAM), president of the Malaysian Hockey Confederation, vice-president of the Asian Football Confederation and a member of FIFA's executive committee.

Despite recent speculation that the Ruler could return to helm FAM as the association undergoes administrative reforms, Al-Sultan Abdullah has ruled out such a possibility, saying the responsibility should instead be entrusted to a younger generation of leaders.

His Royal Highness' support for sports and outdoor pursuits has often been seen as more than a personal hobby; it reflects a belief that sporting excellence helps cultivate resilience, teamwork and determination among young people while strengthening social bonds within communities.

The Sultan has also consistently emphasised the importance of education and the development of future generations.

In various public addresses, His Royal Highness has encouraged students to pursue knowledge, embrace innovation and contribute positively to society.

That message has become increasingly relevant as Pahang continues to adapt to rapid technological and economic change.

Al-Sultan Abdullah recently commended the National Heart Institute University College for awarding scholarships to two outstanding students from Pulau Tioman and called on other higher education institutions to come forward and assist in producing quality human capital from rural and island areas.

His Royal Highness expressed pride over the success of the two scholarship recipients and decreed that both students should fully capitalise on the opportunity given by focusing entirely on their studies.

"Failure is not an option. Do not think about failure. Ensure that you succeed within this study period because you will become the benchmark for other youths on Pulau Tioman," said Al-Sultan Abdullah.

Beyond education, concern for the welfare of ordinary citizens has remained a recurring theme throughout the Sultan's reign.

Whether during festive celebrations, community programmes or visits following natural disasters, His Royal Highness has frequently taken the opportunity to meet people from all walks of life.

community programmes and personally engaging with those affected by hardship.

Such visits have reinforced his image as a Ruler who prefers to meet people on the ground rather than remain distant from everyday concerns.

Environmental conservation has likewise emerged as an area of growing importance. As Peninsular Malaysia's largest state, Pahang is home to extensive forests, rivers and biodiversity that form an invaluable national heritage.

On numerous occasions, the Sultan has spoken of the need to safeguard these natural treasures for future generations while ensuring that development proceeds responsibly and sustainably.

Earlier this year, Al-Sultan Abdullah instructed all relevant parties to work together to protect the natural environment and crack down on illegal land encroachment activities, during a visit to Cameron Highlands.

The Sultan has consistently stressed the need to balance development with environmental preservation, particularly in ecologically sensitive areas such as Cameron Highlands.

The Sultan's public engagements also reflect a broader commitment to strengthening social harmony.

Through participation in cultural, religious and community events, His Royal Highness has consistently encouraged mutual respect, unity and cooperation among the diverse communities that make up Pahang.

Such values continue to serve as an important foundation for the state's stability and progress.

Another defining aspect of Al-Sultan Abdullah's reign has been the emphasis placed on preparing future generations for leadership and service.

This commitment is reflected not only in the Sultan's own engagements with young people, but also in the increasingly active public role of Tengku Mahkota Pahang Tengku Hassanal Ibrahim Alam Shah.

Through youth forums, educational programmes, sustainability initiatives and community engagements, the Tengku Mahkota has championed issues affecting the younger generation, reinforcing the royal institution's long-term commitment to nurturing responsible, resilient and forward-looking citizens.

While royal duties remain central to his role, these wider interests reveal another dimension of the Sultan's leadership.

They portray a Ruler who seeks not only to fulfil constitutional responsibilities but also to inspire confidence, encourage excellence and remain connected to the everyday aspirations of the people.

As Pahang celebrates the Sultan's official birthday, these contributions beyond the throne provide a fuller picture of his reign. They demonstrate that leadership is measured not only through official responsibilities, but also through a sustained commitment to the well-being, development and future of the state and its people.

Adding a touch of royal prestige to the badminton event, the Sultan graced the PETRONAS Malaysia Open 2026 at Axiata Arena, Bukit Jalil, in January.

Vision for sustainable progress

SINCE Al-Sultan Abdullah Ri'ayatuddin Al-Mustafa Billah Shah ascended the throne in 2019, Pahang has continued to evolve amid changing economic, environmental and social challenges.

As Peninsular Malaysia's largest state, Pahang occupies a unique position in the country's development landscape.

Rich in natural resources, home to vast forests, thriving agricultural land, renowned tourism destinations and expanding industrial centres, the state has sought to strike a careful balance between expanding its economy and preserving the forests, rivers and biodiversity that have long defined Pahang.

That balance has become increasingly important as major infrastructure projects reshape the state's landscape while environmental conservation remains high on the public agenda.

Infrastructure development has remained a key priority. Major projects such as the Central Spine Road and the East Coast Rail Link (ECRL) are expected to improve connectivity within the state and enhance links with other parts of Peninsular Malaysia.

As of April, the ECRL alignment in Pahang had reached 97.3% completion.

Pahang public works, transport and health committee chairman Datuk Razali Kassim said the ECRL project is not just a railway line, but the state's future involving seven strategic stations: Bentong, Temerloh, Maran, Paya Besar, KotaSAS, Kuantan Port and Cherating.

He stressed that the state government's focus was on creating job opportunities, building new towns along the ECRL route and bringing the economy to the future generation.

"We don't want the development to be just beautiful on paper. It should be something that the people can feel, use and be proud of from future rail networks to job opportunities," he said.

Beyond improving connectivity, the ECRL is expected to stimulate new economic corridors across the state. The seven stations have been identified as future growth nodes capable of attracting investment, supporting industrial development and improving access between the east coast and the Klang Valley.

The broader economic outlook has remained positive despite a moderation in growth. Pahang's GDP rose to RM71bil in 2025, an increase of 3.2% from the previous year.

The services sector continued to lead expansion, supported by tourism-related activities, trade and government services, while agriculture and manufacturing remained important pillars of the state economy.

As major infrastructure projects such as the ECRL near completion, policymakers are looking to improve connectivity and create new growth corridors capable of attracting investment and generating employment opportunities across the state.

Improved connectivity is expected to strengthen several key sectors of Pahang's economy.

Tourism continues to be anchored by destinations such as Cameron Highlands, Taman Negara, Cherating and Pulau Tioman, while agriculture, including oil palm and fruit cultivation remains a major contributor to livelihoods across the state.

Manufacturing, logistics, and small and medium enterprises have also expanded in recent years, with the ECRL expected to further enhance trade and investment opportunities.

As a state renowned for its rich biodiversity and extensive forest reserves, environmental stewardship remains a defining challenge for Pahang. While development projects continue to reshape the state's landscape, the protection of natural ecosystems such as Cameron Highlands and Taman Negara remains firmly on the public agenda.

During a visit to Cameron Highlands in May, Al-Sultan Abdullah urged farmers to adopt modern agricultural practices that reduce reliance on pesticides and harmful chemicals, saying environmentally friendly farming was essential to preserving the sustainability of the highlands while ensuring local produce remained competitive in international markets.

His remarks reflected a broader emphasis on balancing economic growth with responsible stewardship of the state's natural resources.

Concerns over illegal land clearing, deforestation and environmental degradation have also highlighted the challenges of balancing development with conservation.

At the same time, efforts to promote sustainable land use, responsible tourism and environmental awareness reflect a growing recognition of the need to preserve natural resources for future generations.

Ultimately, the success of development is measured not only through infrastructure or economic growth, but through improvements in people's quality of life.

Seven years into Al-Sultan Abdullah's reign, Pahang's story is no longer defined solely by new highways, rail links or investment figures. It is equally about ensuring that progress does not come at the expense of the forests, rivers and communities that have long shaped the state's identity.

As development gathers pace, maintaining that balance between economic ambition, environmental stewardship and the well-being of the rakyat will remain one of Pahang's defining priorities.

Rich tapestry of natural wonders

FROM ancient rainforests and highland retreats to royal heritage and thriving agricultural communities, Pahang's 11 districts each contribute to the identity of Peninsular Malaysia's largest state.

Together, they showcase the rich cultural, economic and natural diversity that has shaped Pahang through the years.

The waters of Pulau Tioman remain a haven for marine life, with diverse wildlife thriving in its natural surroundings.

Bentong

Often regarded as the gateway between the Klang Valley and the east coast, Bentong has long been known for its agriculture, particularly ginger and durian cultivation. The district's cool hills, waterfalls and forest reserves have also made it a popular destination for ecotourism.

In recent years, Bentong has benefited from improved connectivity, helping to support tourism, small businesses and local industries.

Bera

Bera is best known for Tasik Bera, Malaysia's first Ramsar-designated wetland of international importance. Home to diverse wildlife and indigenous communities, the district is a reminder of Pahang's rich environmental heritage.

Agriculture remains an important economic activity, while ecotourism continues to attract visitors seeking a closer connection with nature.

Cameron Highlands

Among Malaysia's most famous tourism destinations, Cameron Highlands is renowned for its cool climate, tea plantations, vegetable farms and flower nurseries.

The district plays an important role in the nation's food supply while remaining one of its most visited highland retreats. Balancing agricultural productivity with environmental sustainability remains an ongoing priority.

Jerantut

Often referred to as the gateway to Taman Negara, Jerantut is home to one of the world's oldest tropical rainforests. The district's economy is closely linked to tourism, agriculture and forestry.

Visitors from around the world travel here for jungle trekking, river expeditions and the unique biodiversity that has made Taman Negara a national treasure.

Kuantan

As the state capital, Kuantan serves as Pahang's administrative, commercial and economic centre. The city is home to major industries, educational institutions and Kuantan Port, one of the country's key maritime gateways.

Popular attractions such as Teluk Cempedak and nearby beaches continue to support a vibrant tourism sector alongside growing industrial development.

Lipis

Steeped in history, Lipis once served as the capital of Pahang and remains one of the state's most significant heritage districts. The district is also home to Lipis Geopark, recognised for its unique geological features and natural landscapes.

With vast forest reserves and rural communities, Lipis reflects the close relationship between heritage, conservation and sustainable development.

Maran

Strategically located along major transport routes, Maran has developed into an important agricultural and commercial district. Oil palm cultivation remains a key economic activity, while improved infrastructure has strengthened connectivity with neighbouring districts.

Maran's central location positions it as a vital link between communities across Pahang.

Pekan

Pekan holds a special place as Pahang's royal town and seat of the Pahang Sultanate. Rich in cultural heritage, the district is home to royal institutions, museums and historical landmarks that reflect the state's long history.

Pekan is also an important centre for manufacturing and automotive industries, blending tradition with modern development.

Raub

Known throughout Malaysia for its premium Musang King durians, Raub has built a reputation as one of the country's leading fruit-producing districts.

The area also has a long history of gold mining, which contributed significantly to its early development.

Today, agriculture, tourism and small enterprises continue to support the local economy.

Rompin

Located along Pahang's southern coastline, Rompin is famous for its marine resources, fishing industry and access to Pulau Tioman, one of Malaysia's most celebrated island destinations.

The district is also known internationally among sport-fishing enthusiasts, particularly for its annual sailfish season. Its coastal environment and natural attractions make tourism an increasingly important sector.

Temerloh

Often described as the heart of Pahang, Temerloh is synonymous with ikan patin and the famous patin tempoyak dish.

Situated near the confluence of major rivers, the district has long served as a trading and transportation hub.

Agriculture, aquaculture and services remain key contributors to its economy, while its central location continues to support regional development.
